HOW DO YOU WANT TO BE REMEMBERED?

Following the recent death of the 41st President of the United States, George H.W. Bush, many people have been sharing their memories of him. By all accounts, President Bush was a good man, a loyal servant to this great country, a loving husband and father, and a true gentleman.

Though people have disagreed with his political views and some of his decisions as president, I have not heard anyone disagree with the assessment stated above. People of all walks of life mourn his passing and honor his memory. I am one of those.

His son, George W. Bush, the 43rd President of the United States, was asked what he remembered about his father. Among other things, He said, "He loved unconditionally." He confessed that he and his siblings sometimes put that love to the test, but in the final analysis they always knew their father loved them. What a wonderful thing to remember about one's father!

How do you want to be remembered. I would suggest what others have also suggested, that we ask that questions to ourselves, answer it in our heart, and then begin to live that way. To be remembered in a certain way, we must first live that way. And, if we are not doing that presently, let's begin today. Because, today we are creating tomorrow's memories!
