THE EASIEST PART

Several years ago, I read a post from a man who was leaving for church services. It read in part, “Heading out for the easiest part of being a Christian.”

I have never forgotten those words, and I agree.

Attending church services each week is easy for me. Maybe that’s partly because of the way I was reared. I’ve never known anything else. As a child, my family went every time the doors were open. And, I have continued to practice the same thing in my adult life, because I believe it is good for me and is what God wants me to do. The fact that I’m the preacher figures in there somewhere, too.

For me, there are much harder parts of being a Christian. I have trouble with that “love thy neighbor” thing. That part about returning good for evil is a problem sometimes, too. And who can forget about the command to forgive people who trespass against us. To be quite honest, that part about being slow to anger also give me fits on occasion.

And the list goes on and on.

Compared to things like those just mentioned, attending church services is pretty easy. Don’t you agree?

But, did you ever consider this? Going to church regularly and worshipping God, learning more about Him, and fellowshiping with His people can help me be better prepared to handle some of the harder things.

Hum!
