THANKSGIVING

A Short History

In the United States, Thanksgiving Day is celebrated on the fourth Thursday in November each year. The history of Thanksgiving is a bit sketchy, but there are some things we can know.

The Pilgrims landed in America aboard the Mayflower in December of 1620 after a crossing of 66 days. Their first winter in the new land was brutal. About one half of the original group died of exposure, scurvy, and outbreaks of contagious diseases. The people spent a great deal of time fasting and praying in those early months.

Fortunately, with some help from the native Americans (primarily an Indian named Squanto, who had spent time in London and could speak English), things began to look brighter. The Plymouth Colony began to grow stronger, the fields were set to provide a bountiful harvest, the rivers were full of fish, and they finally had the one thing they had sought in leaving England—religious freedom.

In November of 1621, Governor Bradford organized a feast of celebration and invited a group of Native Americans to attend. The Pilgrims did not use the term, but it is remembered as our country's "first Thanksgiving."

Special days of Thanksgiving followed the harvests throughout the New English Colonies, but on different and varying dates. The custom was kept alive by proclamations of state governors.

George Washington proclaimed a national day of Thanksgiving on November 26, 1789. President Lincoln set the last Thursday of November to be a day of Thanksgiving in 1863. It was Franklin D. Roosevelt who proclaimed the third Thursday in November as our national Day of Thanksgiving. In 1941, by act of congress, the date was changed back to the fourth Thursday in November.

The history is interesting, but the most important thing is for us to always be thankful to God for His wonderful blessings.
